

Lucía Quesada

Lucía Quesada is an Expert Partner at EconLogic. She specializes in microeconomics, industrial organization, competition policy, and regulated markets. She has worked advising clients on issues related to market analysis, competition policy, regulatory framework revisions and impact evaluation. She has broad experience in several economic sectors, including means of payment, aluminum, cement, pharmaceuticals, transport, telecommunications, financial, electricity, ports, oil and gas, steel, waste management, and food and beverages, among others.

Between 2016 and 2020, she served as National Director of Competition Advocacy in the National Commission for the Defense of Competition, in charge of market studies, competition advocacy to the private sector and international relations. She previously served as Senior Economist at Compass Lexecon between 2012 and 2016, where she worked on advising clients on competition and regulatory issues, as well as in damages assessment in judicial litigation and international arbitration.

Lucía is the author of several publications on competition and regulation, including articles on certification agencies, reputation as collusion deterrence, oil contracts and contract renegotiation. Her teaching activities have focused on microeconomics, game theory, industrial organization and antitrust for undergraduate and graduate students at the University Torcuato Di Tella, the University of Wisconsin - Madison, HEC School of Management, the University of San Andrés and the University of Buenos Aires.

Currently, she is vice-president (vice-chancellor) and full-time professor at Universidad de San Andrés. She was an assistant professor at University Torcuato Di Tella between 2005 and 2012 and at the University of Wisconsin - Madison between 2003 and 2005.

Lucía is PhD in Economics from the University of Toulouse (France) and holds an MA in Economic Policy and a Degree in Economics from the University of Buenos Aires (Argentina).